Kitchen Renovation Budgets: Compare the Details

The cost of a kitchen renovation depends on its scope, cabinet specifications, worktops, appliances and the building work involved. A useful budget separates these items instead of relying on one total. Before comparing quotations, check that each supplier has priced the same design, materials and installation responsibilities.

Define the scope first

Separate cabinetry from worktops, appliances, plumbing, electrical work, tiling and decoration. Identify who will remove existing units and who will make good the room afterwards. Clarify whether measuring, delivery and installation are included. This makes it easier to recognise omissions before they become unexpected expenses.

Look inside the cupboards

Ask what the quotation specifies for cabinet construction, door finish, drawer systems and internal accessories. A pantry with adjustable shelves is a different product from one fitted with several pull-out mechanisms. Decide which details will improve your daily routine and which you could simplify without losing the overall design.

Keep allowances visible

If a material or fitting has not been selected, record the allowance and what happens when the final choice is made. Compare quotations using the same appliance list and drawing revision. Set aside a project contingency appropriate to the unknowns in the property, rather than treating every available rand as a finish budget.

Agree how changes are handled

Request written confirmation of changes to design, price and timing before additional work proceeds. Keep a shared record of approvals so that everyone refers to the same information. A carefully defined budget supports better choices: it allows you to spend deliberately on the features that matter most.
